SIGHTS · CORINTHIA

Archaeological Museum of Ancient Feneos

About

In the mountainous north-western corner of Corinthia, in the valley of Feneos, a small museum gathers the finds of an area most people visit for its scenery rather than its history — unfairly so.

What you will see

The cases present finds from the archaeological site of Ancient Feneos, where a sanctuary dedicated to Asklepios has been identified, together with material from wider sites across the valley: sculpture, pottery, coins and objects of daily life.

The museum earns its place by tying landscape to history: the same valley known today for Lake Doxa and its fir forests was in antiquity an organised region of sanctuaries and settlements.

Practical notes

- In mountain Corinthia, roughly 80 km from Corinth.
- It is small — half an hour is enough, ideally combined with Lake Doxa.
- Mountain weather changes fast; check road conditions in winter.
- Confirm opening hours before travelling.
